Adobe knows when you're hanging out in Photoshop's online world, and they know where you live. Not only that, but they track the type of device you are using. It's the Digital Millennium Copyright Act (DMCA) that makes it a bit much. You don't have to worry too much in this case, though, because downloading versions of Photoshop that you're not accessing over the Internet is not illegal. There is an additional risk, however, that should ensure that you're wary. If you download and install an old version of the program, you may find that your local copy is not recognizeable and, therefore, unusable. Make sure you back up your photos before making the switch! Now, on to more pleasant topics. For starters, performance and file size have been increased for everything. While it still lags behind Lightroom and other top photo editing apps by a wide margin, the performance increase is significant enough to be noticeable. File size improvements often involve stripping out colors or altering them to make them look more like the source image. I encountered little to no noticeable changes to exported, edited files. Adobe has also incorporated a new queuing system that deals with big files and memory leaks better than the old one. The traditional Instant Preview of edited files also remains in tact. However, the Instant Preview does appear to function a bit faster and doesn't crash, as it used to. I guess it didn't kill Microsoft Word, either.

So I'm building a LinearLayout with an ImageView in it and a TextView, however, I haven't figured out how to retrieve the value of the ImageView in the onCreate() method. I have tried.getValue() on the ImageView and it doesn't appear to work. In my ImageAdapter class I construct the ImageView with the images, and I also have a method in my adapter to set text into the Text view. ImageAdapter.setOnClickListener(new OnClickListener() { @Override public void onClick(View v) { // TODO Auto-generated method stub String message = from+" has clicked"; Toast.makeText(getApplicationContext(), message, Toast.LENGTH_SHORT).show(); //strSelected=test;//image_view action_image.setText(strSelected); } }); But when I run this, the toast appears empty. I tried to set the image_view action_image to a String with setText, but it doesn't work. How can I retrieve the image's name in the string? A: You can access your ImageView like a TextView: ImageView imageView = (ImageView) v; String str = imageView.getText().toString(); Or you can try getTag(). String str = ((ImageView) v).getTag().toString(); (czwartek 12 stycznia 2018). Efekt? Zindy Musarz je terminem nazywał Gowinowi budość („biznes").
